

COMPUTER COOLING SYSTEM

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A cooling system for a computer transfers heat away from a power supply and/or a central processing unit (CPU) in the computer. In an embodiment, heat is drawn away from the CPU to a heat sink by way of a heat pipe and a base member. In another, the heat sink is installed parallel to a power supply unit within the computer, and a fan is installed between the power supply and the heat sink.